Zombie pandemic preparedness: a cautionary observation

Frank Houghton, Katie Del Monte, Daniel Glessner, Joyce Goff, Edward Hopkins, Krista Loney, Ghazal Meratnia, Jeremy Toms

The theme of zombies has been utilised as a student engagement tool across a range of disciplines, including international relations,¹ geography,² microbiology,³ physics,⁴ and epidemiology.^{5,6} Perhaps most notably, this theme has been adopted to explore mathematical modeling of disease diffusion.^{7,8} The zombie theme has also been used to engage with and educate the public about the danger of re-emerging infectious diseases, like rabies.⁹ The popularity of zombies in the entertainment industry offers the hope that using this theme will lead to increased public awareness, as well as interest and engagement in emergency preparedness.

Aware of this potential, the US Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) responded to widespread apathy towards emergency preparedness by launching a new initiative, Preparedness 101: Zombie Pandemic, in 2011, in an effort to reach younger populations.¹⁰ The initial blog posting, entitled "If you're ready for a zombie apocalypse, then you're ready for any emergency," generated phenomenal interest.¹¹ The unprecedented level of public interest was demonstrated by the CDC's original tweet's strong trending on Twitter and the overflow of traffic to the CDC's website, which caused it to crash.¹² Not surprisingly, this extraordinary level of interest raised hopes and expectations concerning the engagement of young adults in emergency preparedness. However, current results of research exploring the use of this tactic have been disappointing.

A randomised study of 340 undergraduate students conducted by Kruvand & Bryant, found that the group exposed to the CDC's zombie blog post were no more likely, and possibly even less likely, to either retain preparedness information or express intent to prepare to develop an emergency kit or plan.¹³ The authors conclude that, "trivialization of the preparedness topic may have occurred in the zombie campaign".¹⁴ A somewhat similar study of students, conducted by Traustino & Ma, investigated the use of media type and a humorous "tongue-in-cheek" zombie theme compared with a more traditional preparedness message. The authors reported that the zombie-themed group reported significantly weaker intentions to engage in preparedness.¹⁵

Eastern Washington University's (EWU) Master of Public Health program at Spokane (Washington State, US) was invited to take part in a Sleep-Over For Science event as part of a federally-funded Area Health Education Centre (AHEC) initiative aimed at attracting rural youth into health science careers. Because the event took place just after Halloween 2015, and because event organisers were familiar with the CDC Zombie preparedness campaign,¹⁶ including its comic novella,¹⁷ posters,¹⁸ and Zombie Disease Detectives activities,¹⁹ the decision was made to incorporate a zombie theme to promote emergency preparedness.

Participants were 4-6 grade elementary school children, aged 9-12 years, with an average age of 10 (SD = 0.9). Thirty-eight percent of the participants were male, and all participants were living in rural areas. Fifty-four responses were collected from a pool of 80 participants, yielding a response rate of 68%. Active parental consent was a precondition of participation. Ethical permission for the study was given by the University's Institutional Review Board.

Following an activity to demonstrate the potential ease of disease diffusion, participants watched a specially prepared 3-minute video depicting a zombie

Loads of fun: I'm sure the skills I learned listening to this book will server me well, when the inevitable Zombie war comes about David Giambruno 2020-10-05 Simply put, loved it.
